DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

1. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

2. Claims 1-16 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Webber, et al. (6,152,481).

Webber discloses a protective device for an occupant of a vehicle comprising an inflatable cushion having first 150 and second 142 portions, the first portion being above and/or below the second portion when the vehicle is upright, and in which inflation of the second portion commences before inflation of the first portion. The second portion 142 comprises a material that decreases in length when inflated so as to create tension. The length-decreasing material is distributed substantially uniformly and continuously throughout the second portion. A bonded construction is used to manage the transfer of gas between the first and second sections without significant leakage. The first portion comprises at least one inflatable node adapted, when inflated, to be positioned at approximately head level of the occupant. The first portion 150 further comprises uninflated material 154 adjacent the at least one inflatable node. The device has an inflator 134 connected to the vehicle and to the second portion and capable of moving as the second portion inflates. The device has a cover (not shown), old and well known in the art, in which the inflatable curtain is positioned when uninflated. The material is braided and has generally circular or U-shaped cross-section, see figure 8 and col. 10, lines 28-31. The braided material has a non-uniform shape, in order to improve deployment between the seat and the vehicle structure. The material forms a taut, semi-rigid, generally linear member when the first inflatable portion is inflated. The inflator 34 moves with the material when the inflatable curtain is pulled downward out of the cover.

3. Claims 1-9 and 14-16 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Butters, et al. (6,517,110).

Butters discloses a protective device for an occupant of a vehicle comprising an inflatable cushion having first 12 and second 11 portions, the first portion being above and/or below the second portion when the vehicle is upright, and in which inflation of the second portion commences before inflation of the first portion. The second portion 11 comprises a material that decreases in length when inflated so as to create tension. The length-decreasing material is distributed substantially uniformly and continuously throughout the second portion. A bonded construction is used to manage the transfer of gas between the first and second sections without significant leakage. The first portion comprises at least one inflatable node adapted, when inflated, to be positioned at approximately head level of the occupant. The first portion 12 further comprises uninflated material 280 adjacent the at least one inflatable node, see figure 26. The device has an inflator (not shown) connected to the vehicle and to the second portion and capable of moving as the second portion inflates. As shown in figures 1A and 1B, Butter discloses a cover 10 in which the inflatable curtain is positioned when uninflated.
